

New Blue Whales Found Thanks to Their Song

A team of scientists were listening to whale songs in the Indian ocean when they heard something which sounded new but familiar.

Each group of blue whales sings songs unique to them. So, when the team heard a new song, they could tell it was a blue whale song. However, they could also tell that it was one which no-one had heard before.

Will it ever be possible to know about all the animals in the oceans?
Why do you think that?

Blue Whales

Blue whales are the largest animals to have ever lived on Earth. They can grow to around 100 ft (30 metres) long. That's about the length of three buses parked end to end.

A blue whale can weigh up to 200 tonnes - the same as around 33 elephants - and has a heart roughly the size of a car!

Blue whales were nearly hunted to extinction in the 20th century, so laws were made to protect them. The number of blue whales has since increased. However, because there are still so few of them, blue whales are still an endangered species.
